

Police seek 'Buster'

Scotland Yard yesterday named another man they wish to interview in connection with their inquiries into the Cheddington mail train robbery. He is Ronald Christopher Edwards, known as "Buster," who is believed to be accompanied by his wife, June Rose, aged 31, and their daughter Nicolette, aged 2.

Photographs of Edwards and his wife were yesterday sent to police forces on the Continent through Interpol and to all police forces in Britain.

The family left their home in Faunce Street, Kennington Park, London SE, soon after the mail train robbery.

Mr Edwards, a Londoner, had a florist's business in Lower Marsh, Waterloo, and in 1961 was the owner of the Walk-in Club, in Lambeth Walk. The club was struck off the register in May, 1961.

Edwards was described as 5ft. 6in. tall, stocky build, fresh complexion, dark brown hair, with a small scar on the left side of his nose. He is well known as "Buster" in South London boxing quarters.

Detectives were yesterday searching for a couple who called at six banks in Oldham with bundles of fivers and changed them into £1 notes. The couple, both in their early twenties, and travelling in a light blue Jaguar, changed bundles of £100 and £200 in fivers. After leaving Oldham the smartly dressed couple called at more banks on the eight mile stretch of main road to Manchester.

A Manchester police spokesman said that his force was satisfied that it knew the identity of the couple, but was still unsure whether they were connected with the mail train robbery.

Darlington (County Durham) police are making inquiries into the case of a man in a Darlington night club who was offering £5 notes for sale at £3 each. Details have been passed to officers investigating the train robbery. It is believed that the man was in possession of at least £200 in fivers. He visited the club on two nights last week.
